course, with the temperature hovering around $-10\text{ }^{\circ}\text{C}$ ($-22\text{ }^{\circ}\text{F}$) I don't consider that a particularly noteworthy achievement. At least for me. By 'here' I mean the little village of Dalton, which is just north of the more populous small town of Tromsø. It is a very quiet and isolated place, although there is a small hotel with a restaurant which is still serving meals despite the $-25\text{ }^{\circ}\text{C}$ ($-13\text{ }^{\circ}\text{F}$) outside the windows. Some people also think it is lovely. We had been camping in the tent, the air-conditioned and full of all sorts of more comfortable accoutrements, for ten days. Well, strictly speaking the observatory part of the equipment was still in the tent, although only some of our stuff was there. The rest of it was in the garage, frozen solid. It was also snowing a bit, which was a fairly inconvenient aspect of the power outage, as being outside a lot was not a good option for weather like this. Still, we have the deep-freeze and we are still alive, so that's a good thing. I didn't get much time to work on a
