Gold Card Tool V0.0.7

tfs-v is a new best practices pipeline for secondary analysis of germline small variants, co-developed by the broad institute and illumina. it combines the gold standard open-source gatk algorithms with the accuracy improvements from dragen to ensure labs of all sizes and disciplines have access to high quality genomic analysis. until now, workflows have been limited by the need to manually setup data and parameters. wisp provides a hpc-friendly integration of the popular open source security tool wireshark, enabling the user to view and analyse security-related data packets. initially, wisp provides basic packet analysis out of the box. a number of plugins are planned to allow researchers to gain further visibility and insight into an instance's traffic. to support the ongoing development of high performance computing on nvidia gpus we are releasing the nvidia gpu driver v415.83 and the nvcc compiler v416.50.2. these releases contain a handful of bug fixes, including work to remove the use of default algorithms, such as the unaligned and thresholded (for amd) transformations. the hierarchical cuda interoperability library (hci) is a translation layer between cuda libraries and cuda programming interface. the hci enables cuda language usage by standard c++ library, aiming at avoiding the learning curve associated with cuda programming. it can automatically bind cuda kernel to gpu and cuda kernel to cpu, and will automatically create and upload a tmp file to the gpu memory to transfer the data between gpu and cpu. ltt: provides a hpc-friendly integration of the popular open source maltego tool, enabling researchers to search and analyse open source intelligence (osint) datasets and build detailed profiles of individuals, organisations, and individuals. it provides a number of pre-built profiles, e.g. the profile of the russian hacking group, cozy bear, and it will be used to identify the members of fancy bears.
